Martin Creed Plays Chicago
January–December 2012

In works that range from intimate poetic objects to large-scale neon signs, Martin Creed reevaluates the status of art with a generous sense of humor. As part of a yearlong residency at MCA Chicago, Creed brings his avant-garde sensibility to the building and the city. In each month of 2012, Creed unveils an artwork in a different space of the MCA, progressing upward through four floors of the building and extending his work outward into the city of Chicago.

The residency project began in January with No. 845 (THINGS), a neon sculpture that makes a simple statement using a single word in the lobby outside the Edlis Neeson Theater. In the following months, Creed introduced other works, such as small objects made from everyday materials like Lego blocks and cardboard boxes (Work No. 798 and Work No. 1349), and living things, such a group of thirteen cacti, each one taller than the last (Work No. 960).

Gradually, the artist has unveiled larger works at the MCA, including colorful wall paintings in the lobby and Puck’s café (Work No. 798, Work No. 1349), and a monumental sculpture on the MCA Plaza. Installed in August, Work No. 1357 spells out the word MOTHERS in 50-foot neon letters in front of the museum’s main entrance, a glowing presence that is equally celebratory and imposing.

In September, the residency expanded out into the city of Chicago, as the MCA presented installations by Creed in four different neighborhoods: for each version of Half the air in a given space, a room was filled halfway with balloons, creating a lively experience as you walk through it, while giving tangible form to something that’s usually invisible: the air around you. The residency continues through December, so stay tuned!

Martin Creed Plays Chicago is organized by Naomi Beckwith, Marilyn and Larry Fields Curator at the Museum of Contemporary Art Chicago.

The featured songs are written by Creed and were recorded analog at Soma Studios operated by John McEntire (Tortoise, The Sea and Cake). Work No. 1370 (Chicago) is engineered by Bill Skibbe (Franz Ferdinand, The Kills, The Fiery Furnaces) and produced by Andy Knowles (The Nice Nice Boys). Ballet as a form of dance was already defined in my head. It is recognizable to me. But ballet is also absurd and funny, if you compare it to how people move and stand around generally in their lives. A ballet dancer is standing up straighter than anyone else. It is an extreme example of the work of living. That’s what I like about it. —Martin Creed

In Work No. 1020 (Ballet), Creed creates a framework in which audiences experience subtle changes of time, speed, and direction. The choreography is methodical and geometric, comprised of the building blocks of classical ballet—five basic positions of the feet that are the foundation of every other step. Creed’s five-member band performs a parallel set of building blocks using the notes of the music scale. Between sections of the dance, Creed and his band play selections from his songbook, such as “What’s the point of it?” or “Pass your bad feelings on.” The music compositions correspond with the minimal choreography. Videos by Creed projected behind the performers are mixed live.

Work No. 1020 (Ballet) was originally commissioned by and performed at Sadler’s Wells, London, in 2009. Additional engagements include The Traverse Theatre as part of the Edinburgh Festival (2010), Sadler’s Wells (2011), and Spring Dance International Festival for Contemporary Dance & Performance, Utrecht (April 2012).

Martin Creed is known for his pared-down works, often the result of a rigorously conceived formula or structure within which the work can move and interact with those witnessing it. His Work No. 850 in 2008 at Tate Britain consisted of athletes running at top speed through the gallery every 30 seconds, all day, for four months. In 2001, he won the Turner Prize for The Lights Going On and Off (Work No. 227). Creed has exhibited his work worldwide, and his musical compositions and performances have often featured in or run parallel to his visual works. Creed was born in Wakefield, England, in 1968, and grew up in Glasgow, Scotland. He lives and works in London and Alicudi, Italy.

Lorena Randi is a dancer, choreographer, and dance educator. She is the choreographic consultant and rehearsal director for Martin Creed’s Work No. 1020 (Ballet) and performed in the work at Spring Dance International Festival for Contemporary Dance & Performance, Utrecht (April 2012). Other recent work includes choreography for Sweeney Todd at Théâtre du Châtelet, Paris; a solo performance of choreography by Aletta Collins as part of Scott Walker’s Drifting and Tilting at The Barbican, London; and The Place Prize–winning Foie Gras with coperformer and choreographer Adam Linder. She has been a company member with Fabulous Beast Dance Theatre, Michael Clark Company, and Charles Linehan. Her extensive work with the Royal Opera House includes 1984 and Rake’s Progress with director Robert LePage. She regularly choreographs and dances in commercials, pop music videos, photo shoots, and art installations.
