FROM THE ARTISTS

WHISPER(S)

Quiet music is distinctive. In experience. In the perception of time passing. Perhaps quiet music is more meaningful when given a reference. Music created by percussion is also distinctive. The medium is so diverse that it effectively isn’t any one thing in particular and almost anything can be manipulated to musical effect. Artists like John Cage, Robert Rauschenberg, and Andy Warhol successfully made the case that by holding the observer accountable anything can be conceptualized artistically.

The trajectory of this program isn’t an arc—it’s a descent.

PROLOGUE

Erik Satie: Vexations (1893–94)

Satie was an enormous influence on those who would redefine art in the twentieth century. He made people consider art differently, and it so happens that he had an unabashed appreciation for beautifully quiet sound. In Vexations, he instructs the performer to play two alternating phrases nested within a cycling bass line for a total of 840 times. It takes around twenty-eight hours to perform at a properly slow tempo. Please imagine that I’ve been sitting here for the full duration and am marking each pass by dropping a sheet to the floor. The concert hasn’t really started yet, so feel free to keep chatting with your fellow concertgoers. The experience of playing Vexations is deeply hypnotic, intended to deceptively lull the listener into believing this will be a predictable program of quiet music. It is called Whisper(s), after all.

PART I

With Lisa Kaplan

Richard Reed Parry: “Heart and Breath” (2014)

The concert begins with “Broken Drum,” the top of the mountain, a bait and switch from an instrument that essentially defines the classical tradition to an object (instrument?) from a scrapyard. If you’re curious, percussionist Maria Finkelmeier (@improvaday on Instagram) posts short improvisations on a rattling old window, some ice, an apple pie, or whatever happens to be available. It’s delightful. Percussion can be anything.

“Wail” is excerpted from the multimovement work The Mathematics of Resonant Bodies, taking us from loud angular jarring sound to loud sustained encompassing sound. Our object/instrument is an air-raid siren. The MCA exhibition Merce Cunningham: Common Time has other wonderful examples of functional objects employed
“Composition as Explanation” is a lecture on art composed by Gertrude Stein. It is also an upcoming production David is creating for Eighth Blackbird. This is the first performance of this excerpted material as a stand-alone piece. It’s an absurdist conversation about how art is created, except that it’s really not so absurdist. It’s mostly true.

“The King of Denmark” is a defining examination of the phenomena of volume. Feldman said in an interview that he was at a beach, hearing sounds close and far away, and thinking about how the soft close sounds seemed to be the same volume as the far away loud sounds. Then he wondered whether the far away loud sounds were really soft sounds. Maybe they were all the same, depending on one’s perspective. So he created a piece that eliminates everything except static soft sound. No form, no time signature, no phrasing, no key signature and—regardless of instrument—no dynamic variation. Only ethereal quiet sounds, ephemeral, like vapor.

LET SOUNDS BE THEMSELVES RATHER THAN VEHICLES FOR MAN-MADE THEORIES, OR EXPRESSIONS OF HUMAN SENTIMENTS.
—JOHN CAGE

And then we have “Inlets” by John Cage, whom we have to thank for questioning everything. At this point we’ve traveled from the most sophisticated of manufactured classical instruments to soft sounds performed on materials from the natural world. My sincere thanks go to Third Coast Percussion for joining me.

It was later in the process of programming this performance that I learned of Voice of the Winds, Marta’s large-scale work for percussionists playing softly. Whisper became Whisper(s).

—MATTHEW DUVALL
PART III
World premiere
For a large percussion orchestra playing softly

In the late 1960s, Marcel Duchamp scrawled some text on a piece of scrap paper and gave it to John Cage. It read: “Sculpture musicale. Sons durant et partant de différents points et formant une sculpture sonore qui dure.” (Musical sculpture. Sounds that last or leave from different places and form a lasting sound sculpture.)

In this spirit, my large-scale work for percussion Voice of the Winds is a sonorous musical sculpture, heavily inspired by John Cage and Morton Feldman, and in equal measure by visual artists Mark Rothko, Robert Rauschenberg, Jasper Johns, and Jackson Pollock.

John Cage favored percussion above all instruments, describing the medium as “instruments of noise.” He believed that “the use of noise to make music will continue and increase until we reach a music produced by all sounds that can be heard.” My percussion work reflects the Cagean philosophy of treating “noise” as an object of art, as well as embracing Cage’s fascination with silence. The percussionists perform in the most delicate and soft way, making the music as light as a feather.

Inhabiting different levels of the MCA, the building materials for this immersive musical sculpture are delicate sonorities, sounds of wood, metal, and skin, and intricate rhythms, all subordinate to an overarching form.

Voice of the Winds comprises two movements. The first introductory movement is an aleatoric processional. The second main movement places the percussion orchestra throughout the interior space of the museum, giving the music exceptional spatial qualities and affecting the movement of sounds in space. In John Cage’s words, it is “live musical sculpture searching for silence through movement, sound, and a change of light.”
