FROM THE CURATORS

I first encountered 600 HIGHWAYMEN’s rigorous and unconventional way of making theater as a dancer myself, auditioning for their work before I had experienced it live. Abigail Browde and Michael Silverstone led us through activities that made our gestures, speech, and arrangements of our bodies in the space suddenly take on unpredictable social meanings.

It seemed to me a feat of directorial magic. As the museum celebrates its 50th anniversary and unveils its newly designed gathering spaces, I am thrilled that this MCA Stage season opens with a work that asks us to attend to how we participate in communities and common spaces. This subtle, remarkable performance experience by Abigail and Michael leaves audience members with insistent, open-ended questions about their participation as individuals in the room and, by extension, in society and the world.

—Tara Aisha Willis

The Fever is cocurated by Yolanda Cesta Cursach, Curator, and Tara Aisha Willis, Associate Curator.
ABOUT THE WORK

The Fever, the latest work by the writer/director team 600 HIGHWAYMEN, is performed in intimate collaboration with the audience. Abigail Browde and Michael Silverstone take the bare essentials of theater—performers, an open stage, a seated audience, speech, sound, and bodily action—and remind us that these elements are all that are needed to transform our perceptions and self-awareness.

Browde and Silverstone have consistently made stripped-down works that blur the expectations of what a performer ought to be or do. Like the set design of The Fever, their work can be deceptively simple: an unremarkable, repeated gesture comes to hold indescribable significance; a performer’s direct gaze takes on unexpected layers of emotion.

600 HIGHWAYMEN’s past works have included This Great Country, which dismantled Arthur Miller’s iconic play Death of a Salesman; This Time Tomorrow, which was created and shown in a church basement; and The Record, devised for a cast of forty-five individuals who had never met before the performance. In Empire City, actors wearing headphones recite along with a recording of an ordinary family conversation, shifting between roles nightly. In the award-winning Employee of the Year, the story of one woman’s journey through life, from beginning to end, is taken on by five performers—all young girls.

Rather than replicating the same experience for each audience, or placing actors into fixed roles, Browde and Silverstone treat each performance as a unique situation arising among people, instigated by their directorial hand but shaped in the moment. The attentiveness that each performer must bring to the unfolding dynamic in the room is exposed and palpable—actors and audience alike are active witnesses to each other.

In The Fever, Browde and Silverstone guide the audience with generosity, even as the work tests the limits of our capacity to support and respond to one another. The performance throws into relief each individual’s experience of the group, offering everyone the chance to practice navigating a community together.
RELATED PROGRAMS

MCA Stage’s series of artist-centered talks, workshops, and open studios engages the public with the artists in intimate settings and provides a closer look at the creative process.

MCA TALK
Fri, Sep 8, following the performance

The audience is invited to join the artists for a conversation moderated by Ira Murfin, Interdisciplinary PhD in Theater and Drama at Northwestern University, directly following the performance.
ACCESSIBLE EVENTS

RELAXED PERFORMANCE WITH ASL INTERPRETATION
Sept 10, 2 PM

Relaxed performances are for people, with or without disabilities, who prefer some flexibility in terms of noise and movement in the theater. Stage lighting and sound have been adapted by the artists to be less intense. Patrons are free to leave and reenter the theater as necessary, and the theater lights are kept at a glow to facilitate movement. Sensory rest areas are available outside the theater for patrons to take a break before returning to the show. Trained volunteers are present to assist.

Amy Kisner and Suzanne Salerno are the ASL interpreters for this performance.
